Dorchester County Economic Development called “Business After Hours” event a tremendous success.

Officials from Dorchester County’s Economic Development Office are calling “Business After Hours” event, which took place, on October 25th, a tremendous success.

The “Business After Hours” was held at Safe Chain Solutions, a distribution company recruited in 2011 by Dorchester County’s Economic Development Office, that occupies the former Hi-Tech Plastics building located in the Chesapeake Industrial Park in Cambridge.

The event was held in recognition of Statewide Economic Development Week, as proclaimed by the Governor Martin O’Malley. During the week of October 24-28, county and local economic development's organizations across Maryland were acknowledged for their service and contributions toward making a positive impact on job growth, and the spurring of capital investment statewide.

Maryland Economic Development Week was organized by The Maryland Economic Development Association (MEDA), and featured a series of economic development conferences, meetings, and workshops statewide, culminating with the MEDA Fall Conference held on Friday, October 28th, at Turf Valley Conference Center in Ellicott City, where Proclamations from around the state were showcased.

The MEDA Fall Conference focused on developing new ideas for reaching the marketplace, and better identifying economic strengths and weaknesses in order to develop and implement initiatives that stimulate state economic growth. The MEDA Fall Conference also recognized individuals who have made a tremendous positive impact on Maryland's economy.

The Dorchester County “Business After Hours” was hosted by the County and City Economic Offices, and the Dorchester Chamber of Commerce. Attendees included state, county and local elected officials, chamber members, and County, city, and local economic development and workforce development staff.

Additionally, the event provided an opportunity to meet and hear Safe Chain Solutions owners Pat and Charles Boyd and their management team. The County extends thanks and appreciation for all who participated in Maryland Economic Development Week.
